Sprint 2 Objectives

- Conduct Fulton web page walkthroughs.
- Improve/Edit product page for new product

FULTON

Insights from User Research 1

- Users don't understand the product fast enough
 - Key benefits appear too far down the page
 - Reviews don't land until users understand the product
 - Stats like "97% pain reduction" and the 90-day guarantee should be near the top
- Visuals need to feel premium and inclusive
 - Some photos feel gendered or target an older demographic
 - Show the product on real people in real situations
 - Add 360 views or layered product shots
 - Replace emojis and weak icons with clean graphics; avoid animated elements

Suggestions 1

- Prove its value at the start by putting more valuable features at the top of the page.
- Change visuals to be more premium (emojis) and keep the coloring cohesive.

FULTON

Insights from User Research 2

- Use positive, outcome-focused language
 - Avoid "helps prevent pain" say "best posture" and "best foot feeling" instead
 - The brand should feel like it comes to the rescue, not just reduces harm
- Vague features hurts credibility
 - Don't just say "warm, breathable" explain why it matters
 - Cut repetitive content; be specific and tie every feature to a real outcome

Suggestions 2

- Change language to make it feel more empowering.
- Explain WHY the features matter.
- Cut repetitive content.

Insights from User Research 3

- The brand should speak to everyone
 - Currently feels too narrow, show the product across genders, ages, and occasions
 - Should show the shoe/insole across different situations (athletic, dress, casual)
 - Move the lifestyle section higher on the page
- Lead with trust signals
 - "Designed by doctors," Forbes, and sustainability are buried, move them up
 - Keep star ratings; cut long review text blocks
 - Highlight craftsmanship details like "made in small batches in Porto, Portugal"

Suggestions 3

- Highlight how the product works in all scenarios.
- Show credibility earlier (Forbes, Made In Portugal, Designed by Doctors)
